

RecoveryView.com
an online journal

General Information for Authors

RecoveryView.com is seeking articles from recovery industry professionals that reflect each professional's area of expertise. We welcome articles on a variety of recovery-related topics including, but not limited to, addiction, pain, trauma, diet/nutrition, and stress management.

Proposals for Articles on New Topics

If there is an unlisted topic that you would like to write about, you may send us a proposal. Please send a brief description of the following elements of your proposed article:

- What is the idea? Why is the idea important?
- Who is the audience for the article?
- How are you planning to communicate your idea?

Submissions

Articles submitted for publication in RecoveryView.com will be considered if they fit the mission of the journal and are written using clear, concise and unambiguous language. Articles should be around 1500 words and should adhere to the rules in the Author Guidelines sheet. If you would like your article to be considered, you may submit it to the Creative Editor at CreativeEditor@RecoveryView.com. Files can be sent in Microsoft Word or PDF formats. Please make sure that your submission contains your phone number, email address, and physical address.

Copyrights & Duplicate Web Content

Those submitting articles must hold all of the rights to the work being submitted. If there is a co-author, the co-author's written permission is required for RecoveryView.com to publish the article.

Please note that RecoveryView.com does not publish duplicate content. If your article already appears somewhere on the web, we cannot publish that content on the website. Finally, if you submit an original, unpublished article to RecoveryView.com and would like to publish it somewhere on the web in the future, be sure to add this line (with the correct information filled into the blanks) at the beginning or end of your article: “(Name of Article) was first published on RecoveryView.com, an Online Journal on (type the date of publication).”
